ORDINARY PEOPLE

The Academy Award for Best Picture in 1980 went to "Ordinary People." The film was nominated for six awards and won four, including Best Supporting Actor (Timothy Hutton), Best Director (Robert Redford's debut) and Best Screenplay (Alvin Sargent). One piece of trivia for you...the marvelous casting director who discovered Timothy Hutton, is my aunt, Judy Doyen Taylor. I believe the film is popular because we are all ordinary people; the tragedy, the healing and the untold suffering revealed in the film is likely a mirror of our lives.

Saint Paul implores us to remember we are "chosen by God in Christ...to be holy and without blemish before (God)" (Eph. 1:4). Yet it is so hard to remember. It is so difficult to trust that God's first, unconditional love for us is more true than anything we can ever ask for or imagine. Once we trust this first love, then our capacity to understand, our capacity to love, our capacity to solve problems, our capacity to reflect God's glory is multiplied. We so often fall into the trap of thinking we have to be perfect first; we have to fix our problems alone before we can join the community of God's love in Christ; we have to stop sinning before we can be forgiven. No! It is the exact opposite: God's Mercy has always been first; no matter the consequences of our sin, including the death of the son of God on the Cross, God's love is more powerful and always available in abundance.

I believe Calvin (Donald Sutherland) understood this first love was possible; sadly, Beth (Mary Tyler Moore) could not let the mercy flow into her bones to reach her wounded soul; gratefully Conrad (Timothy Hutton) passed through the waves of grief, literally and figuratively, to embrace a new beginning in his life. The most compelling scene, for me, was the mandatory Christmas portrait. This was before the tradition of sending photos as Christmas cards became more common practice. Beth was determined to have the perfect photograph taken as if the tragedy and suffering were not real (their other son, Buck, had drowned in a boating accident); Calvin was trying to love her and calm her down at the same time; Conrad could no longer tolerate the pretending, he screamed for the family to face the truth of their pain.

I know there is pain in every photograph. We do not wear it all on our sleeves; yet we cannot put it all in our pocket either. The truth of who we are in Christ cannot be undone by any suffering; bearing the pain brings us to a deeper awareness of the love which binds us. It is important for us to claim our destiny as sons and daughters of God even as we suffer the price of that freedom, a true participation in the suffering of Christ, which leads only to resurrection life. Please let God's Mercy flow into your hearts and from you into the world. That is how we follow Mary in her mission of bringing Christ to the world.

Your Beyond Sunday gifts are making a difference! Thanks to your support and others'... Assumption School has received a $50,000.00 Beyond

Sunday grant from the Roman Catholic Foundation of Eastern Missouri.

The grant will fund our innovative new project, the Assumption School Outdoor Classroom, which is now under construction. This project will provide outdoor experiences that encompass physical, intellectual, emotional, social, and spiritual development of all students from the Assumption day school and PSR program. The goal of the classroom is to offer an additional learning environment to meet our students' needs, increase the school's marketability, and be the first CERTIFIED outdoor classroom in St. Charles County. Students will greatly benefit developmentally from being outdoors. It is vital to construct the STREAMing into God's Creating outdoor classroom to meet the needs of the whole student intellectually, emotionally, socially, spiritually, and physically through enriching outdoor education. A certified outdoor classroom facilitates better social and physical development, improves fitness and wellbeing, supports creativity and imaginative play, reduces stress, and creates feelings of empathy for nature.

The Roman Catholic Foundation will continue to award Beyond Sunday grants to Catholic schools and PSR programs in the Archdiocese of St. Louis through a competitive application and review process. To date, $1.8 million has been granted to benefit local Catholic education. For more information, please visit rcfstl.org.

NOMINATIONS NEEDED FOR NEW PARISH COUNCIL

Our current Parish Council is approaching the end of its three-year term. I am so very grateful to the members for their prayerful leadership and great care for our parish mission. Now is the time for new leadership to come forward as our Parish Council members discern where God is calling them next in ministry as disciples of Jesus.

If you are interested, please nominate yourself soon via email to me (doyen.assumption@gmail.com) or abvmprsr@gmail.com. You are also encouraged to nominate others whom you believe are good leaders of our parish mission; we will reach out to them and encourage them to accept the nomination. In September, we will host an orientation for all nominees to assist them in their discernment. Once nominations are confirmed, in October, we will consult with the Holy Spirit and draw the names of the next Parish Council who will serve for a three-year term.

If you have any questions, please contact me, any member of the current Parish Council or one of our Pastoral Team. God bless you in your own journey as a disciple of Christ.

Pope Francis, Trust

While earthly pleasures such as power and money bring temporary satisfaction, they are ultimately fleeting and deceptive, Pope Francis says, explaining that God alone is faithful and in trusting him, we have nothing to worry about.

“God is not a distant an anonymous being: he is our refuge, the source of our serenity and our peace,” the Pope says: “He is the rock of our salvation, to whom we can cling with the certainty of not falling; he is our defense against the evil that is always lurking.”

For each of us God is a “great friend, ally and father,” he said, but noted that sadly, “we don’t always realize it.”

“We don’t realize that we have a friend, a father, who loves us. We prefer to cling to immediate and contingent goods, forgetting, and at times refuting, the supreme good, which is the paternal love of God,” he said.

To know and feel that God is our Father is especially important “in this age of orphan-hood,” he said, noting that often times we distance ourselves from God’s love “when we go in obsessive pursuit of earthly goods and riches, thus showing an exaggerated love of these realities.”

Many friends or those whom “we think are friends” delude us with false illusions, he said, but stressed that “God never deludes.”

Pope Francis spoke to pilgrims gathered in St. Peter’s Square for his Sunday Angelus address, focusing his speech on the day’s Gospel passage from Matthew in which God tells his disciples that “no one can serve two masters,” and that they don’t need to worry about necessities in life such as food, shelter or clothing, because “your heavenly Father knows that you need them.”

The passage serves as “a strong call to trust in God,” Francis said, explaining that God’s “benevolent and responsive gaze” watches over each of us on a daily basis.

This gaze often “flows beneath the worry of many concerns, which risk taking away serenity and balance,” he said, but noted that “this anxiety is often useless, because it isn’t able to change the course of events.”

Rather, Jesus tells us “not to worry about tomorrow” because “there is a loving Father who never forgets his children,” the Pope said. While trusting in him “doesn’t magically resolve our problems,” it allows us “to confront them with the right spirit.”

He said the “frantic search” for earthly goods and riches is ultimately “illusory and a reason for unhappiness,” but that Jesus gives both his disciples and us “a fundamental gift of life” when he tells them to seek the Kingdom of God before all else.

Part of this search means “trusting in God who does not delude,” he said, and told pilgrims to “get busy as faithful administrators of the goods that he has given us, even the earthly ones, but without ‘overdoing it’ as if everything, even our salvation, depended only on us.”

Turning to the Gospel verse where Jesus says “you cannot serve both God and mammon,” the Pope said it has to be “either the Lord, or fascinating but illusory idols.”

This is a choice that we are called to make not just once, but “in all of our actions, programs and commitments,” he said. “It’s a choice to make in a clear way and to be continuously renewed, because the temptations of reducing everything to money, power and pleasure are relentless.”

While pursuing and honoring these “false idols” brings “fleeting” yet tangible results, choosing the Kingdom of God doesn’t always bear immediate fruits, Pope Francis said, adding that “it’s a decision taken in hope and which leaves the full realization to God.”

“Christian hope is stretched to the future fulfillment of God’s promise and it does not cease before difficulties, because it is founded on fidelity to God, which never fails,” he said.

Francis closed his address praying that Mary would help each person to entrust themselves to the “love and goodness of the heavenly Father,” and to live both with and in him.

“This is the prerequisite for overcoming the torments and adversities of life, and even persecutions, as the witness of many of our brothers and sisters shows us,” he said, and led faithful in praying the traditional Marian prayer.
